The FIFA Women’s World Cup France 2019™, which was deservedly won by the United States, will certainly go down as a watershed in the history of women’s football: the post-France 2019 landscape is a totally different ball game.

From 7 June to 7 July, from Paris to Lyon, the world witnessed an unprecedented showcase of our beloved sport, and we could not be more thankful to the host country France, to the Local Organising Committee, to the FIFA administration, to all the volunteers and to everyone else involved – foremost among them, of course, the fans – for their invaluable contribution. However, it is above all thanks to the preparation and performances of the players, coaches and officials that this tournament will live long in our memories.

In fact, those 31 days of football in France are just the tip of the iceberg. They are the culmination of the exponential, worldwide growth process that has yielded strengthened structures, burgeoning interest – the tournament attracted over one billion viewers! – and ever-increasing quality. A process that was long overdue, and to which our organisation is steadfastly dedicated. That is the reasoning behind the implementation of the VAR system, analytical tools and communication devices at the competition. It is also the reasoning behind the expansion of the FIFA Women’s World Cup™ to 32 teams, which, along the way, allows dozens more of our member associations from all over the world to dream of taking part in this showpiece event.

On the pitch, the 24 teams in France put on the best advertisement for women’s football we could ever have imagined. From the prowess of the dominant Americans to the solid performances of the established European sides and the impressive showings by global debutantes Chile, Jamaica, Scotland and South Africa; from the numerous tightly fought matches – including no fewer than 25 with a one-goal winning margin – to the unmistakeable evolution of goalkeeping across the board, the competition produced manifold moments to remember and stories to be told.

This Technical Report is an outstanding testament to everything that the top stars in women’s football displayed on the pitches across France. The report is focused on in-depth expert analysis, which is supported by video material and performance data.
The FIFA Coaching & Player Development Department was responsible for the activities of the Technical Study Group (TSG), which comprised the following members: April Heinrichs (USA) – Head of the TSG, Sun Wen (China PR), Nadine Kessler (Germany), Élisabeth Loisel (France), Clémentine Touré (Côte d’Ivoire), Branimir Ujević (FIFA TSG Project Leader), Patricia González (FIFA Deputy Project Leader), Pascal Zuberbühler (FIFA Goalkeeping Specialist), Prisca Steinegger (FIFA Senior Coaching & Player Development Manager) and Chris Loxston (FIFA Performance & Game Analyst).

This Technical Report was produced in collaboration with the FIFA Women’s Football Division.
TOURNAMENT OBSERVATION
GOAL ANALYSIS

As far as headline numbers on the pitch are concerned, the FIFA Women’s World Cup France 2019™ mirrored the trends of the 2015 tournament, which was the first to be played in the new 24-team format. Both tournaments witnessed 146 goals, 27% of which came from set plays, and 25 games in both editions had a one-goal winning margin. It is only when we dig a little deeper that we start to observe how the tournaments differed. Scoring the first goal of the game was critical this time around, as 87% of the games were won by the team that struck first, an increase from 71% in 2015 and 67% in 2011. This point is amplified by the fact that in 2019, the side that conceded the opening goal only managed to come back to win in four games, which shows how resiliently teams protected their leads. It cannot be overlooked how ruthless champions the USA were in front of goal this year; they netted 26 times in total – equating to just shy of 18% of the tournament’s overall tally of 146 – of which 13 came in their group-stage opener. Even at the sharp end of the tournament, they consistently scored two goals in every game from the round of 16 to the final, which deservedly earned them the crown for the fourth time since the inaugural FIFA Women’s World Cup™ back in 1991. They certainly came out of the dressing room firing on all cylinders, scoring within the first 13 minutes of every game except the final, always being the first on the scoreboard and never going behind, all of which is a testament to their supremacy on their way to retaining the title.

They say that “delivery is everything” and it certainly was in France, as exemplified by the 27 headers scored, including 15 in open play, representing an increase from the 23 headed goals notched at Canada 2015. Players’ ability to use the wide areas and deliver perfectly weighted, precise crosses created many openings in front of goal for displays of pure aerial goalscoring prowess. The movement and timing exhibited to first lose markers and then arrive at the right moment to meet incoming balls with thumping headers was impressive. A prominent example of dominance in the air was provided by France’s towering 1.87m defender Wendie Renard (3), who stole the show in the opening match – sending the home crowd into raptures twice with solid headers from corner kicks – and scored three goals in this fashion in total. Headed goals also played a critical role at the business end of the tournament. Eventual runners up the Netherlands required two headers from lateral free kicks to get past Italy in the quarter finals, while the USA’s Christen Press (23) and Alex Morgan (13) nodded in a goal apiece in their tightly contested semi-final against England to book their place in the final.

Effective use of space in France contributed to many goals, with two situations particularly catching the eye. Firstly, players showed great intelligence to drift away from and behind defenders, capitalising on the latter’s blind spots. Secondly, they drew on their experience and situational awareness to dart into the pockets of space in front of the defensive line at just the right time. Both these movements allowed players to receive the ball in space and with sufficient time to turn and either deliver decisive through balls – such as slotting in a winger or advancing full-back in the lateral areas – or finish the chances themselves. This space was more prevalent in the earlier stages of the tournament, as teams certainly tightened up as the competition progressed, making it much more difficult to find similar openings.

“The outstanding wing play and variety of service contributed decisively to the high number of headers scored”

April Heinrichs

“The game intelligence and explosive speed displayed by the strikers enabled them to be in the right place at the right time”

Sun Wen

Set-play goals have always been important in tournament football and can sometimes be the X factor in tight matches. In France, we saw ten matches decided by strikes stemming from set pieces: two of these were equalisers, while a corner, free kick or penalty delivered the match winner on the other eight occasions. An average of 36 corners were needed to score in France and, although not quite as efficient as the 28 required at Canada 2015, this still attests to a high degree of effectiveness. This was the first edition of the FIFA Women’s World Cup where the video assistant referee (VAR) system was in place; however, we did not see a sharp rise in the number of penalties awarded (25), up by just three from 2015. Moreover, the 72% conversion rate from penalties during this tournament – down by ten percentage points from 2015 – pays tribute to the level of goalkeeping. The save rate of nearly one from every four showed that it was not so easy to score from the spot, even with the new VAR spotlight monitoring the encroachment of goalkeepers before the ball was kicked.
BUILDING FROM THE BACK

The USA, the Netherlands and England, three of the four semi-finalists, entered their final match of the tournament with an average of 55% or more ball possession, demonstrating that bossing play was a key component of their success. These findings link to the fact that only 9% of passes were played long in the 2019 tournament, a decrease from the previous two editions, which suggests that teams were progressively looking to play shorter passes and build patiently, as opposed to going long and direct.

The evolution in the role of the central defender plays a part here, as we now witness more centre-backs with the ability and composure to successfully build possession, providing another option to progress the ball into the opposition half rather than solely relying on central midfielders. In France, we observed central defenders confidently starting moves, keeping hold of the ball whilst waiting to find the opening to play a penetrating pass through to the midfielders, who were able to take up positions higher up the pitch. Alternatively, when opportunities arose, the centre-halves did not hesitate to dribble the ball and drive forward themselves, bypassing the first line of defensive blocks. The teams also displayed confidence in their ability to maintain possession when building, reducing their defensive cover and protection, as full-backs were permitted to progress into more advanced positions, giving central defenders an extra option up the wing when funnelling play through the middle of the pitch was proving difficult. Since 2011, we have seen a 1% tournament-on-tournament increase in ball-possession time in teams' defensive thirds; this represents an additional 40 minutes per tournament in which teams are attempting to build from the back.

Although we will discuss this in more detail in the specific goalkeeping section of this report, it was also clear that teams felt comfortable in their goalkeepers' ability to contribute to the build-up play with the ball at feet. Goalkeepers' passing prowess allowed the central defenders to move further apart, safe in the knowledge that, when in danger, there was always the option of playing backwards. During the FIFA Women's World Cup 2019, the number of short passes by goalkeepers per match increased by 10% (to an average of 26%) compared to the previous edition. This is a clear indication that teams are no longer classifying the keeper as a mere shot-stopper, but rather are actively involving them when building from the back.

“A dominant feature was the presence of versatile players, including central defenders who were able to play a key role in building up attacks”

Élisabeth Loisel

“A dominant feature was the presence of versatile players, including central defenders who were able to play a key role in building up attacks”

Élisabeth Loisel

“Complete players are those who can dictate the tempo of the game at any given time”

Nadine Kessler
The positional fluidity was one of the most fascinating tactical elements to watch during this FIFA Women’s World Cup. Defensively speaking, teams arrived in France very well organised; therefore, finding ways to infiltrate and unbalance defensive blocks required enhanced understanding between players when in possession. Rotations and positional interchange offered one way to break through, with players moving out of areas to create spaces for others to drive into, forcing defenders to choose whether to follow or to cover the area and keep shape. These situations played havoc with backlines, causing confusion between players, creating imbalances and catching defenders out of position, which made it very difficult to control and manage the constantly emerging spaces that attacking teams were eager to exploit.

Positional rotations are not uncommon in wide areas, with wingers moving inside to create space for overlapping full-backs. However, in France, these situations did not solely occur on the flanks. We also observed central rotations, with players dropping off and being tracked by their markers. This fashioned openings for team-mates to drift into and allowed central progression into the final third. In a nutshell, teams were able to create overloads and find joy both in the wide areas and centrally. The close ball control on display in 2019 also made these situations possible, as such sequences often occur in tight spaces and at pace. Therefore, controlled first-time passes were critical to prevent defenders from recovering their positions or their team-mates from covering spaces left behind. Speed was key in not allowing teams to regroup. All of these elements, combined with high levels of spatial awareness, provided a method for teams to progress into the final third and create danger.

“Having a lot of positional interchange poses a big challenge to all players, as they all have to assume the playmaker role at some point”

Nadine Kessler
WINNING THE BALL BACK

There was a real ferocity to teams’ endeavours to win the ball back quickly after losing it during this tournament, especially when positioned high in the opposition’s half, with 61% of all ball regains occurring within seven seconds. Incredibly, France had an average ball-recovery height (the average distance from their own goal when regaining possession) of just under 50m, followed next by the USA’s 48m. Put into pitch context, this is an average regain position of fewer than three metres inside their own half, which is a clear indication of how high teams were willing to press when they lost the ball. It also ties in with how prepared teams were to take risks when in possession, committing many players forward. In turn, this meant that when the ball was lost, teams already had players high up the pitch, enabling an instant reaction around the ball from an already advanced position. This was clearly a predetermined tactic for most teams, as pressure was typically applied as a collective unit, as opposed to sporadic individual efforts that are far easier to play out against.

“There was a clear attacking mindset, as teams displayed either high or medium high defensive lines. Defending close to their goal was avoided where possible”

Sun Wen

“Effective high pressure only works if you have a well-oiled machine”

April Heinrichs

When facing more organised build-up play, teams were calculated in their approach. Staying compact was the first objective, with the aim of reducing the space between the lines and making it difficult for teams to penetrate. To do this, they pushed the defensive line up to shut down the spaces in front of them, as demonstrated by the average height of the deepest defender out of possession being 37m for the tournament, remarkably two metres further up the pitch than when in possession. Along with the focus on quick ball regains in advanced positions, this is another indication of teams not wanting to defend close to their own goal, instead preferring a higher point of confrontation. The midfielders appeared as the main aggressors in certain set-ups, waiting for teams to build from deep at the back but harrying their opponents when the play reached their line. Successful teams were coherent in their defensive forays, pressing the ball carrier at speed whilst team-mates quickly closed down passing lanes in an attempt to force a mistake or a backwards pass, allowing the team to push the defensive line higher again. As stated previously, it was apparent how well prepared and organised teams were prior to arriving in France for this marquee event, and this preparation was clearly evidenced by the resolute defending on the pitch.
ATTACKING TRANSITIONS

Prior to the start of the tournament, the head of FIFA’s Technical Study Group, April Heinrichs, commented on how important transition play was going to be in France. This prediction proved spot on. Game awareness made the difference at this Women’s World Cup, which highlighted the value of knowing the right moment to launch rapid counter-attacks or when to protect the ball, keeping possession to then build the next move.

“Individually, the players are getting smarter. The first touch is making the difference”

Sun Wen

The open nature of attacking in this tournament, with teams pouring forward in numbers, certainly increased the vulnerability to swift counter-attacks when possession was lost. A quality first touch and first pass were critical in successful attacking transitions, making it possible to play out of the initial pressing around the ball. This created openings, affording players time and space to pass or dribble into while supporting team-mates sprinted at full speed to attack the gaps. The pace of these attacking transitions caused retreating defenders to attempt to close down the ball carrier whilst trying to anticipate the next pass or recover their positions. The speed of the supporting attackers made these attacks so potent, forcing defenders to make decisions, which – if the killer pass was supplied – often opened up a clear path to goal. As always in tournament football, when teams found themselves chasing the game, attacking transition moments became ever more crucial.

“The accuracy of cross-field balls was fundamental to speed up the overall tempo of matches”

Clémentine Touré

Teams also understood when it made sense to hold on to the ball, enabling them to reset their attack and give players time to recover. When it comes to transitions, our minds tend to jump to fast breaks; however, we can also see the process of regaining the ball as a “transition to possession”. The better players and teams in the tournament grasped these transitional moments and demonstrated great game and spatial awareness, having a feel for the right course of action at any given time. This style certainly favoured possession-based teams who had confidence in their ability to break down an organised defensive block and did not solely rely on rapid counter-attacks when the opposition were off-balance. Whether teams transitioned to penetrate or to claim possession, it was clear that, as Heinrichs predicted, transition play played an important role in this tournament.

“Counter-attacking is not only about collective determination and timing: it’s also about having players willing to take on opponents one-on-one”

Élisabeth Loisel
In the early stages of the development of women’s football, it could be said that goalkeeping was an area where there was “room for improvement”. However, after the performances observed in France, it is clear that this improvement has certainly taken place. A common statement within the TSG meetings was that this tournament was marked by some of the “best goalkeeping ever seen” in the female game and this was not only limited to a few teams.

The space behind the defensive line was a key battleground in France and one that the goalkeepers played an important role in guarding. High-level game-reading ability was demonstrated throughout the tournament. This coincided with great starting positions, situational awareness and the capacity to attack the ball by intercepting it as early as possible, clearing many dangerous situations before they could develop. This direct approach showed how dominant the goalkeepers can be and have to be in these situations in order to patrol the spaces outside of the area, especially when the defensive line is high.

“One of the goalkeeping highlights of this tournament was the semi-final between the Netherlands and Sweden, in which both keepers made crucial saves throughout the game, keeping the score goalless and forcing extra time

Pascal Zuberbühler
(FIFA Goalkeeping Specialist)

“The standard of goalkeeping was very high in general, with some newcomers like Chile’s [Christiane] Endler displaying a commanding presence and fantastic shot-stopping qualities”

Clémentine Touré

Another area where goalkeepers stamped their authority on the game was their consistent endeavour to claim crosses. Regardless of whether they were whipped inswingers or outswingers, lofted or driven, the goalkeepers showed good timing and no fear in seeking to deal with these deliveries. One aspect that was especially pleasing to see was that, even when this boldness backfired, this did not deter them from attempting to dominate the next time around.

Finally, we cannot overlook the number of outstanding game-impact saves that were made over the course of the tournament. We observed multiple examples of tremendous aerial ability to reach balls that looked destined for the back of the net; this is epitomised by the fact that the save rate in 2019 (70%) represented a five-percentage-point increase from 2015. It was a similarly impressive story at penalty kicks, where, even with VAR shining a renewed spotlight on encroachment, keepers still managed to achieve a 24% save rate. The cliché that goals win games is undoubtedly true – however, saves keep your team in contention and on countless occasions in key moments of matches, the goalie stepped up and did what she was there to do. It is no wonder that the shot-stoppers on display were referred to as the competition’s “best generation of goalkeepers ever”.
PLAYERS WHO #DAREDTOSHINE

The Women’s World Cup 2019 was the marquee showpiece of the ever-growing strength of women’s football. The full stadiums, record-breaking TV audiences and mass media attention were all a result of the product – the quality of the players on the pitch. Since the inaugural edition in 1991, the tournament has been blessed to feature many superb individuals, but no previous event was graced by the overall level of talent and outstanding individual performances that were on show in 2019.

Many players stood out for their respective teams, but the following are some of the key players that caught the eye.

Lucy Bronze (ENG, 2)

Jill Scott (ENG, 8)  Ellen White (ENG, 18)  Julie Ertz (USA, 8)

Megan Rapinoe (USA, 10)  Rose Lavelle (USA, 16)  Crystal Dunn (USA, 19)

Sari van Veenendaal (NED, 1)  Vivianne Miedema (NED, 9)  Sofia Jakobsson (SWE, 10)
